

We love the touch of wood on the rim of the fantastically retro pendant lights.

EXPERT TIP
Never compromise on quality when it comes to benchtop surfaces.

CEILING THE DEAL

"The old kitchen was located across two rooms in the original house. When building the extension, we found ourselves working with two disjointed rooms, with two separate floor and ceiling heights. So the first order of business was to lower the floor of the extended section by 2000mm so that it became level with the rest of the house. Once that architectural feat was accomplished, I turned to the composition, installing a bank of sleek, handle-free, stacked cabinets to take advantage of the extra ceiling height, using innovative mechanisms to ensure even the tallest cabinets are easily accessible. The wall is mirrored by two rows of flush cabinets above the benchtop, illuminated by strip lighting for a fabulous modern look. The colour scheme is a nod to Nordic styling, with timber used in the lower cabinetry, island bench and stools, and the flooring crowned by gleaming white."
